To whom it may concern,

I am pleased to write this letter of recommendation for Mr. Almonaitis, whom I had the privilege of co-teaching alongside in a 5th-grade classroom as an ENL teacher. Based on my direct experience working with him in the classroom, I recommend him without reservation for the classroom teacher position at your school.

Throughout our year co-teaching together, Mr. Almonaitis demonstrated exceptional classroom management skills. He has a natural ability to create a welcoming environment and culture where every student feels safe, valued, and genuinely wants to be in the classroom. This kind of atmosphere doesn't happen by accident — it's the result of intentional, consistent routines and a real investment in getting to know each student as an individual.

What stood out to me most, though, was his collaborative spirit. From day one, Mr. Almonaitis treated our partnership as a true collaboration rather than a hierarchy. He openly shared his lesson plans with me and gave me the space and trust to take the lead in the classroom when it was needed. He also took the time to mentor me directly, offering practical tips and strategies I could incorporate into my own lessons, along with thoughtful, constructive advice on how to grow and refine my teaching style. That willingness to invest in a colleague's development speaks volumes about his character and his commitment to the profession as a whole, not just to his own classroom.

Mr. Almonaitis would be an asset to any school community. He combines strong instructional skills with genuine warmth, and he brings out the best in both his students and the colleagues around him. I am confident he will continue to build classrooms where students thrive, and I recommend him enthusiastically for this position.
